INFLUENZA PEAK WAS PASSED IN FEBRUARY

In the editorial department of the Connecticut Health Bulletin, March 19, Dr. John T. Black says of the influenza situation:

February influenza statistics are not as yet available, consequently it is impossible to express definite conclusions, but we are convinced that the peak has been passed and that the disease is rapidly declining. From general observation, we do not believe that more than ten per cent. of the reported cases were the same type of disease which was prevalent in the fall of 1919. The other ninety per cent. consisted of more closely the old-fashioned grippe, the disease as reported during January did not involve the same age groups as did the epidemic of 1919, most of the deaths occurring among the very young or those past middle life.

As will be noted in the following table, the deaths in January from influenza and pneumonia exceeded the deaths from these two causes in 1918 by only 83 and were 590 less than those occurring in 1919:

Influenza—1920, 100; 1919, 757; 1918, 39; 1917, 134; 1916, 243; 1915, 14.

Pneumonia (all forms)—1920, 289; 1919, 321; 1918, 321; 1917, 528; 1916, 462; 1915, 211.

All causes—1920, 1920; 1919, 2424; 1918, 1878; 1917, 2317; 1916, 2109; 1915, 1581.

acter, this fine spirit, versatile, keen mind, and pleasing individuality that we called Walt Pearson. Out of the ether the signal is flashed and the spirit of a splendid personality is released to labor no more. In accustomed haunts. But though the presence is gone the memory remains. And what a delightful, helpful, stimulating one it is!

Walt Pearson was himself an institution. In a very large degree he typified the ideal newspaper; he left the impress of his strong and clean manliness on every issue of the Norwich Bulletin, which has no superior in New England. The gift of expression was so highly developed in Mr. Pearson that he needed few words to make his thoughts and views understood. Those thoughts and views included and comprehended the vast range of human activities and an understanding knowledge of Nature and her ways. Through the written and printed lines one could see as through an open window the real man at work, a true, kindly, wholesome man, a man of abounding charity, consideration, good-will, courtesy, strength, wit and humor. In his youth he served his country as one of the boys in blue of the Civil war, and in the after years of a long war, and in the after years of a long life he served with equal devotion in the larger field of a newspaper worker, served with cheerfulness, unselfishness and power. To him newspaper work was opportunity for service to his paper, and to mankind. He had high ideals and he was true to them. He made them a part of his labors and put them into practice, never being content to regard them as mere bric-a-brac. Always he was delivered by Miss Ada Edgerton, a man of high ideals and high words had a charm, a vigor and a pleasing quality as well as a purpose. Years ago he developed a department of comment and notes of a semi-editorial character that he published once a week under the caption of "The Man Who Talks." In chatty, intimate style he talked about the vast number of the things that interested him and his readers. He was especially fond of flowers, of birds, of the glories of the sky and the marvels of earth. These things, together with the doings of men, he reported delightfully. Many a writer has attempted this but very few indeed succeeded so well. In this as in all else Mr. Pearson was true to himself. And now, though released, for all time there remains of him the permanent impression of an honest, large-hearted friend.

A. WALTON PEARSON.

(Hartford Times.)

Though almost the least known beyond the immediate circle of his friends and local readers, of the older editors of Connecticut, A. Walton Pearson of the Norwich Bulletin has for many years been respected and honored. For over thirty-five years he daily served this sterling newspaper, and gave it in great degree its recognized character. For nearly twenty-five years he was its editor, and his writings were distinguished for their well expressed thought. Several years ago he gave up daily work, but his close touch with the affairs and progress of the world he never lost, and his comment and philosophy came to the public once a week under the modest caption of "The Man Who Talks." He did not lay down his pen until he was called to a higher world, and his comment brings real sadness and sense of loss to friends and newspaper readers in eastern Connecticut.

"RELEASED."

(Bristol Press.)

A. Walton Pearson, for forty-one years a member of the staff of the Norwich Bulletin and for the past twenty-seven years its editor in chief, was "released" yesterday. This word "released" is used in the newspaper sense, signifying that on its receipt an office a certain story is set free so it is with this splendid, manly character.

DANBURY RECTOR DETAINED

REV. R. G. GRAHAM PREACHES

Rev. A. C. Coburn, rector of St. James' church, Danbury, who was to have been the preacher at the Lenten service in Trinity Episcopal church on Thursday evening was unable to reach Norwich and the sermon was delivered by Rev. Richard R. Graham, rector of Christ Episcopal church. Rev. Mr. Coburn left Danbury at noon on Thursday but was held up by a train wreck and could not get to Norwich in time for the service.

Rev. Mr. Graham took for his text, St. John 8:11, I am the Good Shepherd. The Lord's shepherd evidently made a deep impression on his early followers, said Rev. Mr. Graham. It is evident that the image of the Good Shepherd, as conceived by the church, is compounded by two pictures; one by the words of the text. I am the Good Shepherd and the other, the parable of the lost sheep.

The Good Shepherd is presented to us by our Lord in the words recorded by St. John as caring for the entire flock. It is evident that His care and guardianship of the flock as a whole is only the result of His care and guardianship of the individual sheep. Our Lord's assertion that He is the shepherd of the flock was in part suggested by His care of the individual. If our religion is to be of any force in our lives Christ must bear their individual relationship to us.

So in each parish or community is professedly a little flock and we are trying to follow the Good Shepherd. Whether we are following Him faithfully or not depends on what knowledge the individual has of Him. Do not let us separate ourselves from the flock. When you think of Christ the Good Shepherd remember this implies fellowship as well as personal care. He cares for you individually and He also cares for you as a member of the flock and you avowingly for the flock.

The preacher at the next Lenten service which will be held next Thursday evening at Christ Episcopal church will be Rev. W. F. Porcher, rector of St. Paul's church, Williamstic.

County Secretary Roy E. Kellogg responded to a toast "Team Work for Father and Son." The main speaker of the evening was State Secretary Hedley Smith of New Haven. The theme of his talk was "Our Sons."

Great to Work Together." In his short talk he brought out the relationship that should exist between father and son. The well chosen illustrations of the prodigal son and the prodigal father will remain in the minds of all as examples of what may happen when fathers and sons fail to be chums.

STONINGTON ROAD, MYSTIC, TESTIFIED THAT HE WAS WALKING EASTWARD ALONG THE HIGHWAY AT THE TIME OF THE ACCIDENT

Stonington road, Mystic, testified that he was walking eastward along the highway at the time of the accident. He saw the motor truck with Ostraw and the two other men passed him on the road and turned into the highway leading to Wilcox crossing.

The witness had walked only a short distance when he saw the express rounding the curve and it flashed across his mind that there was going to be an accident. He heard the whistle of the engine and then heard the crash and he immediately rushed to the crossing where he saw the injured men and the wrecked auto truck.

Deaths of J. S. Pearson, conductor of the express, testified that the headlight of the engine was lighted and that the train was lighted. He told of hearing the whistle and the crash, and then he saw the crash and he immediately rushed to the crossing where he saw the injured men and the wrecked auto truck.

Grover, of New Haven, claim agent, gave testimony about a conversation which he had with Sam Zambarsky, one of the victims of the accident, regarding an adjustment of a claim for injuries.

PAY MEMORIAL TRIBUTES TO A. WALTON PEARSON

The loss to The Bulletin and to the readers of Eastern Connecticut in the death of Editor A. Walton Pearson, last Tuesday, calls forth the following tributes to the worth of his strong character:

A. W. PEARSON.

(Hartford Courant.)

The death of A. W. Pearson, editor of the Norwich Bulletin, takes out of newspaper circles one of its oldest and most respected members, a man whose career marks the oldtime way of newspaper success and responsibility. He began as a printer's apprentice in the days when linotypes or even stereotyping were outside the imagination. He worked for a time under J. Q. A. Stone, long-time editor of the old Windham County Transcript, an admirable weekly of sterling character. He went to Norwich in 1873 and to the Bulletin in 1879, and he had been its editor and chief contributor since 1893. He was a veteran of the Civil war and a man of high personal character. The Bulletin, in an appreciative sketch, says:

Among his newspaper associates he was recognized and esteemed as a master and leader worthy of emulation, whose removal comes to each of us with a sense of personal loss. Out of his wide experience he was ready with helpful suggestion and advice, always showing an interest in the advancement of those whom he could help. Of strong convictions and positive in expressing his views, he was tolerant of the opinion of others and kept a mind open to the truth and was a warm-hearted and delightful friend to those who knew him intimately.

He was 78 years old and did this as a process of his own, which certainly worked out in his own case. He occupied a position of influence in which he always strove for what he thought best and he could ask no better epitaph than what his associates, those who knew him best, passed upon him.

A. WALTON PEARSON.

(New London Day.)

In the death of A. Walton Pearson, the Norwich Bulletin loses a man who had given it 41 years of faithful, efficient service, first as city editor, and since 1893 as editor-in-chief. For the last 25 years Mr. Pearson, who was in his 78th year when he died, had written only the column "The Man Who Talks," which was a regular Saturday feature of the paper, and ready expression of strong convictions on the conservative school. First a democrat in politics, he turned republican after the Greeley campaign and continued.
